Celia Davis

Celia Davis is the widely-respected author of 'The Honey Bee Inside Out' - a lively account of the anatomy and physiology of the honey bee presented in a clear and concise format. She has a degree in agriculture and has been 'fascinated by insects' since childhood. Celia has kept bees for over 20 years gaining her NDB in 1996. She spent six years on the BBKA Examinations Board, is a correspondence tutor and continues to lecture on beekeeping, insects and environmental aspects to a wide range of groups. Her talk to Kent beekeepers promises to be one of great interest.

Mr Bee

This talk attempts to change the average beekeeper's view of drones as useless, expendable members of the bee community. It will cover all aspects of the drone's life and its importance to the colony. Drawing on her experience in beekeeping and her wide knowledge of the insect world Celia will relate the structure of the drone to its function, stressing how perfectly adapted the drone is to its role. She will also discuss aspects of the relationship between the life cycles of drones and Varroa.
