15th November 2001

The magnificent National Honey Show with International Classes lasts for three golden days and is to be opened this year by Trevor Baylis, OBE, the world famous inventor, at Kensington Town Hall, London, on Thursday, 15 November 2001, at 2pm.

Beekeepers, educationalists, environmentalists and other interested folk, from all corners of the UK and overseas, will swarm to this famous venue for the great annual exchanges of ideas, the trade and all the competitions within the exciting yet relaxed, friendly and stimulating atmosphere and be able to meet informally with our honoured guest.

The interest, popularity and value of this event has developed from being long recognised and established throughout the UK to attracting ever-increasing numbers of overseas visitors. Parties of beekeepers are expected from Tobago, Pakistan, Cameroon and Rodrigues in the Indian Ocean. (NB. Updated info. on further visitors weekly).

The entries and exhibits are of exceptional quality demonstrating master skills within spectacular displays, alongside trade and other stands featuring all the appliances, crafts, information and products associated with honeybees and the hive.

There are extensive opportunities to see and learn about the fascinating, rewarding art of bee-keeping; to view these related crafts and purchase bee-related products as gifts prior to the festive season. From various types of honey, beverages, beeswax, candles, carvings, moulds, soaps and polish to confectionery and baking, stationery, books, cosmetics, aids to health, toys, jewellery and more, there is something to suit every age, interest and taste.

The positive must factors are outstanding quality plus value for money afforded whilst supporting and understanding the work of The National Honey Show and The Troy Trust charities.
